

WHO KILLED THE PRESIDENT? Ask JFK himself

By Bo Filter

The war broke out almost immediately – the warriors versus an evolving peace president. Since the 1940s, militants at the Pentagon and CIA were used to getting their way. When John F. Kennedy came to the presidency, General Dwight D. Eisenhower had just left the White House, having signed the US economy over to what he dubbed in his farewell speech the Military Industrial Complex (MIC). Basically, it's the same kind of government Germany and Italy had at the outset of World War II, what Mussolini himself called corporatism, though it was dubbed fascism in Italy. The economy of our utter enemies had come to America without firing a shot. Eisenhower implicitly apologized for doing so, while warning the American people to keep vigilant and never let the military gain excessive influence because the past has proven this to be a fatal mistake to fledgling populisms like America's republic.

At first the new President Kennedy went along with military insiders' escalation of tensions in Viet Nam, not understanding the machinations unfolding. Creating a war in Viet Nam represented tremendous profits for the MIC. As Kennedy grew in understanding of the surrounding circumstances, he decided it was a conflict that the people of Viet Nam should settle. So, in National Security Action Memorandum 263, October 11, 1963 we see that he has adopted the parts of the McNamara-Taylor Report, specifically section I B [1-3], which brings home 1000 troops by year's end and implements a strategy to transfer the US military's mission in Vietnam to the government of South Vietnam by the end of 1965. Ending US involvement in Viet Nam was not an option. Losing profits was not an option. Kennedy had to go.

Problems with the MIC had begun early in JFK's presidency. The Central Intelligence Agency had pre-arranged a war on Cuba in such a way as to trap the new president into going along with it. Kennedy hesitated. He didn't want to go head long into a war he had not had time enough to assess. Kennedy was reluctant to provide air cover, but finally gave approval, stipulating that he would not be forced again into a war of someone else's choosing.

The Bay of Pigs invasion on Cuba was to be launched on April 17, 1961, but in the wee hours before the attack, Allen Dulles, CIA director secretly ordered the air cover to be called off. Dulles had planned to smear JFK's political career. When the attack failed, Kennedy was vilified across the American press as a weak inexperienced president soft on communism. Sensing betrayal, Kennedy wanted answers. Dulles couldn't be reached. In direct charge of the invasion, Dulles instead flew to South America on vacation. Kennedy was furious. He had been set up to be defaced before the nation.

The president struck back. He issued National Security Action Memorandum 55, directing the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to block all clandestine operations by the CIA, and that any further plans of the CIA must first come to the president. The CIA refused to take orders. Kennedy decided to tell the American public that a coup on the United State government was unfolding.

JFK delivered his message through a trusted member of the press, namely Arthur Krock at the New York Times. Krock stated in his editorial on October 3, 1963 that "the CIA's growth was...likened to a malignancy which the very high official was not sure even the Whitehouse could control any longer. If the United States ever experiences an attempt at a coup to overthrow the Government, it will come from the CIA." This was JFK talking to the American people. Remember that the Warren Commission adamantly refused to investigate Krock-JFK finger pointing directly at the CIA. Why? Because Allen Dulles created the Warren Commission through the new President Lyndon Johnson. Dulles made sure the commission was stacked with "friends" of the CIA to make sure the killing was blamed on a lone nut and not him.

So how did this turmoil end in Dallas? After the Bay of Pigs, Kennedy set up a committee to investigate its failure. By early 1962 the president fired the top three bunglers: CIA Director Allen Dulles, CIA Deputy Director Charles Cabell, and Deputy Director for Plans Richard Bissell. They would strike back. Kennedy declared he wanted "to splinter the CIA in a thousand pieces and scatter it to the winds."<sup>1</sup> Charles Cabell's close brother Earle was the mayor of Dallas when Kennedy was killed. Earle participated in changing Kennedy's motorcade route just before the president came to Dallas to pass by the grassy knoll and the book depository.

This route was blatantly in violation of all travel safety rules for the president. The motorcade was originally scheduled to go down Stemmons Freeway at 40 mph., safe from any ambush. This rerouting was critical to setting the stage for ambush around a too slow sharp and therefore illegal turn, making the president a slow moving target. Equally critical was the fact that the redirection put the president near to Oswald, and pinning the crime on Oswald would become much more plausible.

Allen Dulles was steeped in a history of clandestine (illegal) operations going back to the Office of Strategic Services in World War II. Once out of the top position at the CIA, he still conducted illegal covert or black operations globally. Above government in terms of political power, Dulles was positioned to signal the boss of Colonel L. Fletcher Prouty to send Prouty to the South Pole during the assassination period. Why? Because Prouty was the top coordinator for protection of the president at the Pentagon when the president travelled to cities like Dallas.<sup>2</sup> No one else was assigned his place. Protective cover was being stripped away. Kennedy was being prepared for ambush.

Secret Service agent Emory P. Roberts served as the commander of the secret service agents in the follow-up car. Just before turning on to Elm Street where Kennedy was shot, agent Roberts rose from his seat and, using his voice and several hand gestures, forced agent Henry J. Rybka to fall back from the rear area of JFK's limousine, causing a perplexed Rybka to stop and raise his arms several times in dismay and disgust. You can watch it on film.<sup>3</sup> Now Kennedy was naked without any veil of protection, a wide open target to his assailants.

With federal agents out of the way, all that was left to protect Kennedy was the Dallas police, but minutes before the motorcade arrived, the Dallas Sheriff called in all the police and instructed them to in no way interfere with or assist in the protection of the president. Deputy Sheriff Roger Craig was among the police and sheriffs ordered to stand down.

Craig was in front of the sheriff's office when the first reports rang out. Craig immediately charged around the corner onto Elm to see a motorcade motorcycle policeman charge up the grassy knoll. Craig followed him, assuming he saw someone shoot from there. Craig questioned several people behind the fence and they all said bullets had been fired from behind the fence. Dozens of other people ran up the knoll in pursuit as well, having heard rifle fire and seen gun smoke rise above the picket fence. Those interviewed spoke as well of the smell of gun powder on the grassy knoll. A military man watching the motorcade in front of the picket fence on the grassy knoll immediately fell to the ground when a bullet wisped by his ear. He believed he was about to die in the line of fire as he heard more bullets whistle over him. This author stood behind the picket fence three years ago. The perfect position for a sniper is right where the two picket fences join together.

A 45 caliber slug among bits of brain matter was found across the street from the picket fence by Craig's fellow officer E. R. (Buddy) Walthers. Walthers discussed finding it with Craig that evening November 22. Walther also gave a statement to the Dallas Press confirming his find. However, he later denied finding it—after Sheriff Decker had a long talk with him and subsequent to newsmen questioning the Sheriff about the evidence.<sup>4</sup> Decker had a lot to cover up. To appreciate the scene fully, read Jim Garrison's riveting book: On the Trail of the Assassins.

Back at the murder scene, Deputy Sheriff Craig, who incidentally was named officer of the year in 1960, was ordered to go and investigate the Texas School Book Depository building. There he met Deputy Eugene Boone who first spotted a rifle near the stairwell on the 6th floor. They were immediately joined by police Lt. Day from the identification bureau, Homicide Capt. Fritz,

Picture of President John F. Kennedy in the limousine in Dallas, Texas, on Main Street, minutes before the assassination (taken from Wikipedia) and deputy constable Seymour Weitzman, an expert on weapons. Lt. Day briefly inspected the rifle and handed it to Capt. Fritz who asked if anyone knew what kind of rifle it was. Weitzman said it looks like a Mauser. Upon close inspection, they could see "7.65 Mauser" stamped clearly on the barrel. Capt. They all looked and agreed it was a Mauser.<sup>5</sup>

Curiously, three bullets were found that belonged to an Italian rifle, instead of a German Mauser. These bullets were found carefully lined up in a row an inch apart, as if to prepare the public for a murder story claiming just three bullets were used. Someone had placed Italian bullets there to associate them with Oswald's Italian rifle. A rifle needed to be found to reveal a sniper den. If bullets were found, the case could be open and closed quickly before a criminal investigation could set in and blow the case open. The connections between rifles and shell casings had no evidentiary trail. This critical fact would have to be covered up in the damage control aftermath of the operation. Moreover, placing a highly visible person with a rifle in a 6th floor window would be a critical feature in casting Oswald in a patsy role of the person in the window.

One can imagine that a real assassin would leave his Mauser behind to avoid suspicion on the run. As well, Mauser shell casings would have been found randomly on the floor as they flew out randomly during the reloading moments of a bolt action rifle. No Mauser bullets were found. More incriminating to a conspiracy, the Mauser disappeared. We are told to believe that the Dallas Police Department or the Sheriff's Office lost it. Adding to justified suspicion, all the attending officers except Craig changed their testimony of finding a Mauser under pressure. Now they identifying an Italian rifle, what the Warren Commission wanted the world to accept. Who had the power to force this square peg into a round hole? Tragically, for refusing to lie by changing his testimony like the others, Deputy Craig paid with his life.<sup>6</sup> Killing witnesses is common in such high stakes crimes. sination and who then died over a period of the next few years under suspicious circumstances. Craig was just one of them.

A statistician applied factor analysis to see if these numbers were significant to the murder or likely a matter of coincidence. After crunching the numbers, he found that all these deaths had a chance of one in over 13 trillion of being a coincidence. In other words, these people died because they had evidence of a conspiracy to kill the president. They were silenced. Others were threatened by the FBI to keep their mouths shut. They did, and several of them are still alive.

Today, November 22, 2013, on the 50th anniversary of Kennedy's death the mass media is absolutely relentless in shoring up their lone-nut Oswald theory. For 50 years it has remained a theory. A genuine forensic investigation was blocked and replaced with a commission staffed by the primary suspects in the murder. Investigations are required to move theory to indictment to court to proof to conviction. Lee Harvey Oswald was not convicted of killing Kennedy in any legal court, but he has been convicted for 50 years by the media alone, a media that is controlled by a supra-militarized elite working behind the scenes. This super power elite has taken control of popular commercial media in violation of Constitutional freedom of the press.<sup>7</sup>

Such a militarized commercial media might be dubbed McMedia. McMedia has one job, which is to sell their product to the exclusion of all others— a lone nut Oswald theory — but also simultaneously to blemish all factual evidence as poor competing products of conspiracy theories. Facts that keep coming to light are relegated to conspiracy theories by McMedia, which is why talk show hosts tell us now that conspiracy theories will always keep coming up, so just ignore them. True, facts do keep coming up, and certainly they should not be ignored. Remain aware of McMedia making up new ridiculous conspiracy theories to be painted in with the honest ones, the ones that stand to topple McMedia and its masters.

McMedia is coached by the Department of Psychological Warfare in the Pentagon. In the existing U.S. military state, the media is assumed under military control in order to sell the Oswald theory, while censoring all others. As such, McMedia is wholly discredited as a news source but instead a pure deception propaganda mechanism for the Pentagon's global warmongering, the most lucrative business on the planet.

This 50 year anniversary of the cover up of the JFK assassination defines the failure of American democracy. For 50 years America's militarized media has commercialized like soap their lone nut theory at the expense of censoring an encyclopedic amount of prima facie evidence. McMedia brings out facts only when they want to try and debunk the facts, turn them into a mistake or invention. Sometimes McMedia engages reverse engineering, starting with the desired conclusion then working their way back making up facts or distorting real facts and cherry picking any information that makes their case plausible and spins an illusion of truth.

In fact, reverse engineering has become a trademark of government cover ups a make believe science world. Popular science shows themselves are often conscripted into serving McMedia. For example, NOVA has been used on several occasions for this practice. On this 50th anniversary, like in earlier shows, the shows producers gloss over several presumptions, hoping to trick the public into a foregone conclusion.

For instance, the magic bullet can inflict seven wounds because the bodies in the car were magically in perfect alignment. Buying this line is like buying unseen swampland in a real estate adventure. Yet, this is the exact presumption McMedia wants a presumably gullible public to accept. We hear the never ending story of "new scientific evidence" that proves their magic bullet theory.

This time the magic bullet allegedly came out in pristine condition because in their scientific experiment they shot a full metal bullet into soft wood with little noticeable effect. Was this a specially-hardened bullet for the test or was the soft wood not much more of a challenge than shooting a bullet into water and seeing the same pristine outcome. Was the bullet that magically appeared on the Parkland Hospital stretcher that same alleged magic bullet? There is no evidentiary chain of evidence whatsoever that links the stretcher magic bullet to either of the two rifles they found, nor further linked to Oswald in any way.

No criminal investigation followed as prescribed by law, only a mock trial by the Warren Commission whose main character was a prime suspect in ordering the killing of JFK.

The only trial was the McMedia witch hunt of Oswald. We are supposed to call America civilized because it has supposedly abandoned witch hunting for modern civil legal procedures. Sorry, McMedia might as be called the bureau for witch hunts. Sirhan Sirhan, alleged killer of Robert Kennedy and James Earl Ray, alleged killer of Martin Luther King, and Osama bin Laden first come to mind.

McMedia has also created a lone nut religion. Anyone who does not attend to their lone nut church commandments is a heretic worthy of persecution dubbed a conspiracy theorist playing the role of satan. Today you can be a conspiracy theorist or a terrorist if you fail to buy into their church of blind faith. Remember the president who said you are either with us or the terrorists, meaning you are either a blind faith disciple, free of all facts and understanding, or you are a terrorist. Remember, Osama bin Laden received a McMedia witch trial, not a real one, and he was never wanted for the crime. Hurry to the FBI's most wanted list on the internet before they take his poster down. Read all the print on the poster and you will see that he was not wanted for 9/11. Notice at the bottom that the poster was updated two months after 9/11. Plenty of time had passed to find real incriminating evidence on him if it existed. Even the CIA admitted they never found any link between Osama bin Laden and 9/11. Instead, bin Laden was convicted on 9/11 by a McMedia witch hunt. Like the JFK assassination coverup, the cover up of 9/11 is equally nonstop.

To keep an economic-political grip on any society the military will have to spend billions of dollars on damage control. Every time a new fact is revealed exposing any of the lone-nut theories, the Pentagon's damage control mechanisms are launched onto the public by McMedia. Their best defense is to keep important real news off McMedia by way of censorship, the most useful damage control mechanism of all.

However, replaying the false lone nut pageant is important as well. Every year on the respective anniversaries the public is served a lone not boost shot to keep imbedding McMedia's single message. The authors of scholarly research never are allowed on McMedia.

The relentless unapologetic selling of lone nut theories is critical to surviving all the military crimes, which by definition require a number of individuals in any specific crime, in other words a conspiracy. This is why the CIA came up with the idea to smear revelators as conspiracy theorists. This term is a military invention to smear anyone drubbing up the truth. The truth is their enemy, and lone nut sales keep the public at bay.

Another critical factor of McMedia is distraction. Keep the public occupied with anything but supra-government conspiracies. Their success can be measured in how many of the actual conspirators have been tried and gone to prison. We witness 50 years of no arrests, no trials, and no convictions of the lead suspects.

Many of the lower level conspirators play supportive roles as in obstruction of justice: blocking testimony of subordinates; black listing witnesses so they can't find gainful employment, tailing witnesses to scare them out of testifying; tampering with evidence, whether it's physical or testimonial. Deputy Sheriff Roger Craig suffered all these inequities. Craig counted 14 alterations to his testimony at the Warren Commission by Dave Belin, junior counsel for the Warren Commission, who questioned him in April of 1964.<sup>8</sup> His boss, Dallas Sheriff James Eric (Bill) Decker demanded that Craig tell inquisitors that he saw no one and heard nothing. Truth was forbidden. Decker was feared by all authorities as well as his subjects in Dallas County.

President Johnson immediately ordered Kennedy's limousine refurbished, removing important clues to the assassination on the flimsy excuse that he wanted to save Jackie Kennedy from further agony, as if she would ever be riding in the president's limousine again. These acts of obstruction are felonies clear and simple. Neither Belin nor Johnson nor Decker was ever indicted for obstruction of justice. In glaring contrast, if any one in the general public commits obstruction of justice, they are immediately thrown into jail.

This brings up the subject of whose justice system is being applied — certainly not the U.S. Constitutional justice system. Globally dominant elite, a disguised military junta has usurped Constitution government. Therefore, U.S. citizens are faced with imperial justice, the age-old justice of king's rights, a pyramid of militant power that the masses have long decried but alas allow to continue. President Kennedy died for threatening their power.

In March of 1964, the newly assigned President Johnson issued NSAM 288. This memorandum opened the door for full-scale attacks on Viet Nam. The war contractors were now free to continue amassing profits. The warmongers won the war. The peace president was dead and the Viet Nam protests that followed were immediately attacked by McMedia as traitors of America. They were traitors to the new American military junta who pulled the strings at McMedia, where protestors and JFK have been ridiculed side by side ever since.

Is there any hope left would be a logical question to ask. In a recent poll, 75% of Americans believe Oswald did not act alone.<sup>9</sup> The cabalists have something to worry about. Perhaps this is why McMedia has gone all out on the 50th anniversary in trying to shore up their sagging success. We want to know if their media mind control machinery is wearing out on the subject, while the public's healthy side of distrust is gaining strength.

Let's hope that part of the answer is that the proactive alternative media to McMedia is gaining ground. The alternative media represents Constitutional freedom of the press. Let's embrace and celebrate alternative media, the small press. We could start having annual Constitutional media awards to contrast institutionalized disinformation. A free press is the greatest weapon of the people against tyranny.

Climate change driving weather off the charts

By Janet Larsen

Meteorologists are calling the typhoon that slammed into the Philippines with 195-mile-an-hour winds on November 8, 2013, the most powerful tropical storm to make landfall on record. Super Typhoon Haiyan had gusts reaching 235 miles per hour and a storm surge swelling as high as 20 feet, so the destruction it left behind matched that of a tornado combined with a tsunami.

Three days later, at the opening of the United Nations climate negotiations in Warsaw, Poland, the lead delegate from the Philippines, Yeb Saño, spoke of the "hell-storm" that left "a vast wasteland of mud and debris and dead bodies." He continued: "Despite the massive efforts...in preparing for the onslaught of this monster of a storm, it was just a force too powerful and, even as a nation familiar with storms, Haiyan was nothing we have ever experienced before, or perhaps nothing that any country has ever experienced before."

Haiyan arrived less than a year after

Super Typhoon Bopha, which at that point was the costliest storm in Philippine history with $1.7 billion in damages and some 1,900 deaths. Bopha was then outdone monetarily by Trami, which in August 2013 brought the Philippines torrential rains and flooding, leaving some $2.2 billion in damages in its wake. Early estimates put Haiyan's destruction tab at $14 billion. With more than 4 million people displaced and thousands feared dead, Haiyan looks to be a record on multiple fronts.

The commonly used tropical storm wind speed scale goes up to category 5: more than 156 miles per hour. But as Yeb Saño notes, "if there [were] a category 6, [Haiyan] would have fallen squarely in that box."

The world is literally moving off the charts. With the global average temperature up over half a degree Celsius since the 1970s and with more warming in store, we are starting to witness weather anomalies so severe we need to update our metrics and extend our graphs.

The warming is the result of a buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere—largely from burning coal, oil, and natural gas—that trap heat from the sun. The extra warmth is taken up by the oceans and also heats the atmosphere, the former faster than the latter, creating a temperature differential that can create more powerful storms. A warmer atmosphere can hold more water vapor—all the better to produce punishing rainstorms. Warmer sea surfaces provide more energy for storms to grow stronger. The surface waters where Haiyan formed measured up to 1 degree Celsius above normal—that is, until the storm sucked up heat to use as fuel as it passed over the sea.

Physics dictates that warmer water also takes up more space; thus excess heat in the world's oceans has raised sea level, a process that is compounded by the accelerating melting of the Earth's polar ice caps and mountain glaciers. By the end of this century, sea level could rise by some 6 feet, making storm surge all the more dangerous.

In recent years, intense storms have showed up in unprecedented locations.

Brazil was struck by its first recorded hurricane in 2004, and Spain and the Canary Islands experienced their first-ever tropical storms in 2005. In 2007, a fierce tropical cyclone in the Arabian Sea brought torrential rain to parts of Oman and Iran. In 2008, the first severe tropical storm to hit Myanmar's densely populated Irrawaddy Delta left 90,000 people dead. And 2012's Superstorm Sandy was unusual in both its span and its pathway—an unexpected left-hand turn directly into New Jersey.

Like these freak storms, we are in uncharted territory. Big storms occurred prior to human-induced climate change, of course, but raising the Earth's temperature is like putting the weather on steroids. We might not see more tropical storms, but the ones that form are likely to pack a more powerful punch. Heat waves are predicted to last longer and become more intense. Rainfall could come fast and furious in some places, while other parts of the globe could see very little at all.

Globally, high temperature records al-
